

JUST BECAUSE YOU MOVED OUT of your parents' home doesn't mean you'll never again hear "Turn down that stereo!" Next time, it won't be a loved one saying those words, but a neighbor with speed dial access to the police department.

NOISE ANNOYS

- If you've got thin apartment walls, open windows or a fondness for Marilyn Manson at full blast, invest in some cordless headphones.
- Experiment with different stereo volume levels while your neighbor listens from the other side of the wall. Agree to keep the levels below a certain point.
- When the urge strikes to crank it up and fantasize you're the fifth member of Limp Bizkit, fire up the car CD player and take a noisy drive to the beach.

Turn down that stereo ... before the noise police replace your records with elevator music.
